

COALITION FOR A DEMOCRATIC WORKPLACE

June 15, 2011

Dear Reps. Gowdy, Scott and Wilson:

On behalf of millions of job creators concerned with increasing threats to the basic tenets of free enterprise, we write in support of H.R. 1976, the Job Protection Act.

The Coalition for a Democratic Workplace, a group of more than 500 organizations, has been united in its opposition to the so-called “Employee Free Choice Act” (EFCA) and EFCA alternatives that pose a similar threat to workers, businesses and the U.S. economy. Thanks to you and other elected officials who stood firm against this damaging legislation, the threat of EFCA is less immediate in this Congress.

Politically powerful labor unions, other EFCA supporters, and their allies in government are not backing down, however. Having failed to achieve their goals through legislation, they are now manipulating the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) to promote “card check,” a key component of EFCA, and other radical anti-business policies. The NLRB’s actions are fueling economic uncertainty and have serious negative ramifications for millions of employers, U.S. workers they have hired or would like to hire, and consumers.

In the last year alone, the NLRB has sought to:

- erode the right of employees to seek a federally supervised secret ballot election;
- permit continued and more severe union intimidation of employees;
- force employers to post a biased “notice of rights” that omits key information about workers’ rights to withhold payment of any union dues spent on politics and to refuse to pay for a union’s unwanted services in the 22 states with right to work laws; and
- grant unprecedented access to union agents onto employers’ private property, even where a union’s intent is not to organize the company, but simply do it harm.

One case pending before the NLRB that may have a particularly negative impact on the economy is Specialty Healthcare. In that case, NLRB is considering reversing 50 years of established law and allowing “micro-unions.” This would make it easier for unions to organize by permitting them to form smaller bargaining units that often exclude those similarly situated employees who oppose unionization, effectively disenfranchising them. Under current law, bargaining units must include employees that share a community of interest. Smaller units are only permissible where the employees in the proposed unit have interests that are “sufficiently distinct from those of other employees to warrant the establishment of a separate unit.” This prevents proliferation of small “fractured units.”

If the NLRB decides in Specialty Healthcare to permit micro-unions and fractured units, businesses would be required to manage multiple small units of similarly situated employees with increased chances of work stoppages, and potentially different pay scales, benefits, work rules and bargaining schedules. This would greatly limit an employer's ability to cross train and meet customer and client demands via lean, flexible staffing as employees could not perform work assigned to another units. Employees also would suffer from reduced job opportunities as promotions and transfers would be hindered by organizational unit barriers. The potential negative impact of the Specialty Healthcare case to workers, businesses and our economy is dramatic.

Indications are the NLRB is planning other actions that will be equally damaging to workers, businesses and our economy. For example, the agency has requested information from vendors about remote electronic voting, presumably as an alternative to secret ballot elections. Yet, electronic voting provides none of the privacy protections of a secret ballot election, and is essentially card check by another name.

Individual NLRB members also have indicated they wish to dramatically shorten election time frames from targeted 42 days and the current median of 38 days. This effort is nothing more than a thinly veiled attempt by the NLRB to limit information workers may receive about the disadvantages of unions generally and about possible problems with the specific union attempting to organize their place of employment. Prior to the union filing an election petition, workers may have heard only from the union, as employers often are not even aware of the union's campaign and, thus, are unable to respond to the union's statements and promises. The current 38 to 42 day time frame allows workers to hear from both their employer and the union.

The most recent outrageous action of the NLRB, which is the impetus of the Job Protection Act, is unprecedented attempt by the agency's Acting General Counsel to mandate where and how one company—Boeing—can operate and expand its business and what the company may tell the public and its employees about costs related to collective bargaining. The federal government must not be allowed to tell business where it can or cannot create jobs or to prevent a company from making accurate statements about costs that it incurs. We view this threat to one employer as a key test for the business environment of all employers.

The Job Protection Act addresses this most recent action by the NLRB and would guarantee that businesses and entrepreneurs have the ability to decide where to conduct their business and to discuss with workers and the public various costs associated with unionization. We applaud your leadership in introducing legislation to prevent the NLRB's unprecedented intrusion on free enterprise. The Job Protection Act will encourage investment in our nation and its workforce.

We thank you for introducing the Job Protection Act and encourage Members of Congress to use every tool available to them to stop this rogue agency from implementing policies to appease a single special interest at the expense of workers, businesses and our economy.
